Writing Process Worksheet

The more organized you are at your writing process, the more your writing will improve. If you write deliberately, in small steps, your composition will be greatly improved as opposed to simply writing a full essay without proper preparation. With little consideration to the given to audience, your thesis statement, transitions, etc., the last to consider if your final evaluation is quite "messy," with sentences "a mile long," etc. ...also reflect the thinking process, as in this statement, "mandatory" is good!

---

1. Topic Brainstorm

List possible topics for your essay:

-
-
-
-
-
-
-

---

2. Choose a Topic

What is your topic?

Why did you choose your topic? Which prompt is most eligible in writing about it?

---

3. Intended Audience

To whom are you writing? Who exactly might care about this topic and what your focus is on about the topic?

---

4. So What?

Why is your topic interesting, meaningful or significant? Why should readers care about your subject?

---

5. Inventory your Topics

List the information to bring up in your essay:

-
-

Exercise more study tools with flashcards on our website, [illegible]