In most of our cities, the air is becoming dangerously full of carbon monoxide and hydrocarbons. These pollutants are becoming the cause of serious health problems. To reduce the amount of traffic, some cities are following the experimental parking program in the United States. Some have proposed bans of limiting the use of automobiles. This may sound like a rather painful idea to some, but, when you think about it, there are many advantages. Either the system can be used half the time, it has been proposed that people be encouraged to walk into the downtown area some other way or else a road. It has also been proposed that cars be prevented from parking in certain areas in the city.

There are some letters from newspaper readers, not expressing the author's opinion of these proposals.

1. One letter writer suggests a rule that if a car is driven in a certain area, everyone else would drive a car. Another letter writer suggests that if a car is driven in a certain area, everyone else would drive a car. This letter writer would like to see the city build additional city parking lots to carry these people to work jobs.
